U.S. military officers intent on putting through a universal training law for the US say that such perpendents by all three of the major powers of the United Nations -- the US, Britain and Russia -- will be discussed at the forthcoming "Big Three" conference.

The "Big Three" will consult on this bit of postwar planning to maintain "place by force" partly because of the intense opposition now developing against enactment of universal service in the years after the war, and because it is believed that a bill counct be passed in Britain does not go along with universal service of her own.

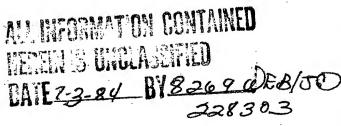

In other words, our sources say, if Britain doesn't adopt some form of training, out also Russia, the opposition will have smightly argument to descat a 12 training program.

Formbors of Congress who favor universal service admit that, as in 1920, there will be a terrific fight over this proposal, and that it may, as was the case then, be defeated. They are not confident of their ability to show through such legislation.

It has been rumcred that the President will leave for the "Big Three" conference right after the Thanksgiving holiday, but there has been no confirmation. Rather, it is indicated by White House arrangements that the Prex will return to the White House before leaving for the meeting place. If that is the case, the meeting may be delayed into December.

High runking army officers in the War Department are expecting British General Montgomery to be removed from his cormand unless he begins to "live in the present," which they say he isn't doing now.

One of Army ASF Boss Somervell's high ranking officers just reported, off the record:

"I called on Gon Montgomery I found that he was living in a trailor, and that the entire wall space inside was covered with maps of the North African compaign. There were detailed, relief maps of Lasserino Paes, maps of the desert, with lines clearly drawn to show the old Montgomery campaigns.

"Encking this up, Nentgomery, in a four-hour talk with me, never once moved out of North Africa. It was all reminiscing. We wasn't thinking in forms of northwestern Enrope at all. He was still fighting that north African campaign over - relighting through his own days of glory. When I investigated, I found that other officers had had the same experience on th Monty. That's not the kind of man we want fighting in northwestern Europe. I found that Monty had nearly as many Britishers under him as there were Americans in France at that time - and that he had the Britishers sitting on their came. That was one of the thinge Marshall took up with Montgomery when the U.S. chief of staff was over there. It wasn't until Marshall had given Monty two U.S. armored divisions that he got going."

The Army won't permit publication on this story until a 1982 seems conference is held in Paris, ten days or two weeks hence, the Paul HeNutt, and another group of government bigwigs pulled out Washington in a C-54 today bound for another one of those front inspection tows.

chairmen for operations; Dr. William Tollie, WPB vice-chairman for civilian requirements; James A. Folger, WPB vice-chairman for field operations; Joseph Scenen, WPB vice-chairman for lebor production, and Frank Relamee, regional director of the War Manpower Commission under McNutt.

In charge of the party, and acting as guide and army host, was Brig. Gen. Albert J. Browning, Army Service Forces material—boss, who has kerdly been in this country two weeks after taking a gang of business men to the front.

Gen. Eisenhover liked the results of the first trip = in which the business men got a chance to see how the products they turned out were being used = so much that he decided he'd like to have some high government officials, particularly manpower and wer production board topsiders, come take a look too.

کے

Don Welson came back to Wachington a very workled men about the state of the nation. While he hasn't yet provided a date for chatting, he has talked to several of his government friends, and his executive secretry Eddic Lock relays the following, not for attribution to Ion as yet:

ing. He had been reading the papers, and watching this wer production improvement drive. He turned to me, and said:

"I'm worried. I've been dealing with the public now for 35 years, and if I've learned one thing. I've learned this: you cannot drive the public; you can lead it, but you can't drive it. That is what I'm afraid the government heads are trying to do right now, and I'm afraid for the government in this situation."

What Nelson didn't say then, but what has a lot of government topsiders worried, is what they feel is a lamentable public relations (not just press relations, but public relations) situation in the government.

Brig. Gen. Al Browning just had a sample of it, on his recent trip to France, where he saw Eisenhower, and spent time with all of the Commanders there.

"We were at the press conference which I held for the crowd of business men I had in tow," Browning explained. "I started off lambasting the newspaper men and women. I told them that I'd just been up to the front lines, and that I had seen how we'd advance 400 yards, and then see rosy stories coming out about a great advance. I asked them why didn't they tell the truth in their stories for back home.

at me mad as hell. They told me they'd write the truth out of there if I'd get the damned censors off their neck. They said they knew what sort of stuff would clear, that they had to write daily stories, and that they'd learned to write the sort of stuff the censors would pass. So, I shut up. Its goe me a little bit worried. I have taken it up with General Somervell, and he's upset about it, too. I don't know just what he's going to do about it, but I hope he does something. If I get a charce to talk to Eisenhower on this trip I'm starting today, I'm going to take it up with him. I know, as a matter of fact, that Eisenhower is somewhat vorried about the way the GI Joe is thinking about the people back home. He said he isn't sure the woldier is certain that he's getting backed up properly at home."

In a confidential cable sent Sunday, Eden urged Halifax to hold a press conference to elaborate the recort statements made by Churchill and by Eden. Eden insisted in the cable how much the Prime Minister and himself are worried by the attitude of the US Press. Their main concern, Eden said, was criticism directed against the British post-war policy rather than that on particular points, like Italy and Greece

Halifax and his advisers at the Embassy are against a press conference of this time feeling that this would be an overplay.

Story billowing around Washington and probably all other profootball cities is that there was something phony about beating administered the Redskins by NYGiants three weeks ago. Story points out that odds on Saturday morning were 6-5 giants (it seemed like an even-money game), that odds Saturday afternoon were 3-1 Giants and that no bookmaker anywhere in the country would take a bet against the Giants on Sunday. This, added to a number of misplays by the Redskins had brought the rumor that something was peculiar. But it's still just a rumor. We watch.

A member of the Administration, that in the true of the hill, made these points worth remembering in connection with the Jones-Wallace 70486 fight:

- 1. At the moment the Administration could not muster enough votes to have Wallace confirmed. (HeWaughton's estimate is that not more thus 46 can be counted for Wallace now, three short of the required number).
- 2. But time favors Wallace. The heat generated against him our cool off.
- 5. The opposition's manoeuver to separate the EFC from Commerce is not very practical. The Precident would certainly vote the George bill and the opposition could not obtain anough votes in the Esuse and Senate to override ENCLOSURE.

of FDR: He is never 1 th to haul off and swat a new press with something bodactous, just to establish the something congress always reacts violently at first. Generally in the final showdown, when notes are counted in public and each senator has had time to feel and weigh the immense prestige and power of the White House, the wavering opponents tend to wilt under pressure. There are always some who talk loud in private council but lose nerve when it comes to belling the cat, others who save face in compromise.

A newWallace legend is in the making. Note the first paragraph in Drawfearson's column of January 24 (Washington Post). What Pearson says about Henry's Inauguration performance was true. Many people did remark on his impressive appearance, his ringing ennunciation of the cath of office. By Cog comparison with Senator Truman, who looked like a nice little guy, Wallace did look like a future presidential contender. In Washington the gossips have been talking a lot about what a tough politician Wallace turned out to be.

The real question: Is Wallace a tough politician or is he merely the willing weapon of the toughest minded political group to invade U.S. politics in the last quarter century - the PAC-CIO Labor bloc? We tried this week for an off-the-record talk with Mr. Wallace to see what he had to say about it. Wallace's secretary said that he would see a TIME reporter after his confirmation. He has been ducking all other interviews, even with his closest newspaper friends.

Washington is chuckling over a story which trickled out of last week's cabinet meeting.

At this session the cabinet discussed and approved the signing of a lend lease agreement with the DeGaulle French government. As the discussion got underway, one member asked Secretary of State Ed Stattinius to explain what was in the agreement. Stattinius in confusion confessed he didn't know. Leo Crowley and Henry Forgenthau had to explain. Ed Prichard commented dryly:

"Isn't it a hell of a note whom Henry Morgenthau and Leo Crowley are faster on their feet than the Secretary of State?"

State, the Economic Stabilization office, and Treasury, are giving a find kickaround to administration plans for getting Congressional confirmation of the Bretton Woods monetary agreement. State feels that the phrase in the Bretton Woods part directing that it be taken up with the "governments" concerned, means with President Receivedt, because of the presidential powers in foreign policy. Because it has to admit a general understanding that the matter would be taken up with Congress, State would like a simple resolution which would declare that the President was "authorized" to sign the agreement, but is quossy because that might set a precedent limiting later actions by FDR in the foreign affairs field.

The commercial airlines have received a generous outpouring of Army and Navy surplus transport planes in the last two months, but the allocations have now slowed to driblets and soon they will stop altogether, probably until after V-E day.

Later this week, the SWPA will announce one of the few remaining driblets. Fifteen additional transports have been declared surplus. Of these, domestic airlines will get eight, foreign air carriers, seven (Lebanon, three; Mexico, two; Brazil and Columbia, one each).

SWPA will also announce that it has 14 Budd cargo planes available for allocation, is open to applications. The Army originally contracted for 600 of these Budd planes, then cancelled the contract after 18 had been delivered. The fourteen planes that remain of this batch of 18 are now being released as surplus because they were found too slow for the military purposes for which they were intended.

Society editors and some of Washington's social climbers, as well as many who have already climbed, are aghact at the social tectics of the new vice-president, Harry Truman.

Truman was invited to 14 formal parties during three days, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, last week, attended nearly half a dosen additional private parties. He didn't turn down a single invitation extended him as the new vice-president. That, as the social writers here see it, is going a little too far, especially when one of the parties Earry attended was given by the owner of a warehouse in Washington, a guy who just isn't visited by the best people! Harry doesn't care. He seems to be having a grand time.

Earry lost no time in pulling tighter the strings which bind him to FDR. Shortly after the lunch in the White House on inauguration day, whon he found himself standing in a receiving line with Mrs. Roosevolt and Mrs. Truman, he suddenly looked around, saw that FDR had disappeared, inquired of Mrs. R.: "Where's the boss?" Oh, he was just upstairs, remarked Mrs. Roosevelt.

"Then," said Trumen with a wide smile," that's where I'm going." And he went, too. He came back with a good, brisk aroma of bourbon about him.

Next big government shake-up will revolve around Henry Wallace ADM 92 according to friends of the retiring Vice President will certainly come before the end of the month, might come at any time now. These sources believe that Wallace emerged from his last meeting with FDR "pleased", believe that he now has a good chance to become Secretary of Commerce. This depends, however, on whether Rocsevelt can keep his mind firm, can fight off the expected onslaught by the conservative bloc here and throughout the country.

Carefully trying to keep the two sets of facts separate, Wallace's closest adviser told us that (1) both before and since November 8, the President has been consistently friendly with Wallace, and (2) during the same period he has been consistently unfriendly to Jesse Jones, has committed himself to cutting the old Texan down.

Although Jones has been girding for the fight (as reported before), the impression of Wallace's No. 1 adviser is that nothing will be done about Secretary of Labor immediately and that the milder wings of labor wouldn't stand for Wallace; nothing will be done about Secretary of Agriculture immediately, and this would represent no forward step in the education of Henry Wallace anyhow; Rousevelt has got the foreign economic picture too entangled as between State, Crowley, etc., and is too busy to try to set up a super-duper economic office for Wallace to take over. The only remaining job for Wallace then is the Commerce job, from whore he would have a chance to get at his dream of full ALL INCOMMATION CONTAINED employment through bringing small business into the limelight, meshing middleclass America into its economic future instead of leaving it in the hands of the big fellows.

This source said he didn't believe either the railroad brotherhoods or Matt Woll and Bill Mutcheson, of AFL, would stand for Wallace in the Labor Department. It was pointed out that Wallace is not the property of the CIO-that they took him ever, rather than the reverse - nevertheless he would be regarded as too leftish for the big right-wing segment in the union picture. Besides, there is nothing in the cards immediately to indicate that the Labor Department is anything more than a statistical agency.

While it is possible that Wallace could emerge into some new job having to do with international food distribution or the creation of 60,000,000 jobs, his friends now have the impression that Roosevelt has things too tangled up as it is to attempt the creation of a Cabinet-level office, which would infringe on the prerogntives of some Administration stalwarts. Besides, they think, the war has Roosevelt too pre-occupied to take on such a complicated task.

But again ten days ago - for the second time - Franklin Roosevelt told Wallace not to make plans to leave Washington after January 1. After a two-hour Tuncheon chat, Wallace amerged silent, but according to his menter, happy. And it still appeared that Jesse Jones would be cut out of the Cabinet, have his face saved with the five-billion dollar RFC. This, said Wallace's man, had the Vice-President about half-way into Jesse Jones' chair already.

The only fear was whether the President "would remain as strong" once the conservatives began to squawk. Our source felt that nothing would save Josse Jones's Cabinot job - "not even if Wallace dropped dead". He also felt that Henry would have no trouble with Senate confirmation. The delay is probably due to a typical Roosevelt desire to avoid any more friction than he has to have - but events are piling up and this is the one big question that must be resolved shortly.

Tommy Corcoran, the ex-New Dealer and now the prosperous - but prosperous - attorney, has D. Worth Clark, lame duck senator from Idaho, on the verge of joining his law firm.

This afternoon Tormy said he thought he had him. It will be sewed up in a day or two, and when it comes will provide something of a sensation in Washington - as well as a story. Corcoran and Clark were classmates at law school; Corcoran has the highest regard for Clark's legal ability. Clark is a good friend of Bert Theeler, and Corcoran, who now believes the whole White House setup is ready to blow sky high, thinks that what will blow it is a bloc of senators, a bloc which might even find such characters as Claude Pepper and Wheeler playing together.

On January 21, 1942, David Hulburd, acting for Time Inc.'s War Problems Committee, sent out a memorandum on the subject of distribution of confidential military information. It said, in part:

"Our correspondents, especially our Washington correspondents, are constantly obtaining and passing on to us all sorts of really confidential matter ... which, if it got into the wrong hands, would raise hell with the war effort and subject Time Inc. to serious criticism and worse.

"Hence we must establish rigid and absolute control over the interoffice and intra office exchange of such information"

The necessity for rigid control of such military information is just as great in 1945 as it was three years ago.

Equally important, if somewhat less obvious, is the necessity of keeping confidential non-military information which we as editors receive in confidence from our correspondents. Our professional standards in this regard should be no less high than our patriotic standards in regard to military information. Our correspondents should feel free to pass on to us anything and everything that comes their way without fear that we will blab it carelessly around. The same rules apply to both military and non-military confidential information as circulated under the News Bureau's control:

- 1) No distribution to anyone except the person to whom it is addressed.
- 2) No copies to be made and kept for future reference by the person who receives it.
- 3) Destruction of the News Bureau copy as soon as it has been read by the addressee.
- No idle chatter outside the office.

Correspondents, of course, ought not to mark their material confidential unless it really is. Editor Luce has recently complained that some correspondents tend to plaster the word "confidential" on points which are very open secrets. Hulburd will make it his business to see that correspondents are straightened out in this regard.

Nevertheless, the caution remains in full force; we must maintain the highest professional standard in respect to the status of all information we receive under the various confidential categories.

Lec-Crowley, one of Jesse Jones's staunchest rooters, is eadly of the opinion that the axe will fall on his old friend about the time Roosevelt takes off for the Big Three meeting.

Completely aware of the sturdy fight Jesse has put up. Crowley believes that very shortly after inauguration FDR will write a letter to Jenec relieving him the HFC to hang onto, and then probably will appoint Henry Wallace Secretary of Commerce.

Asked if he didn't think Jesce had made it plain he will be difficult to fire, Crowley modded, but eaid: "You write this on your cuff. Every time Receivelt goes off on one of these jaunts, he lets loose with semething just before he goes. He's got to do this right after inauguration, because the inauguration itself gives him the excuse for shake-ups. If he lets it go any length of time he won't be able to do it. And if Wallace stands around here for any length of time without a job he'll begin to look like a dead duck. It's got to be done right after January 20."

Crowley said he wished that it wouldn't happen, but frankly stated it as his belief that Jesse will have to take it.

The president turned to him and said, as well as Barold can remember it:

"Frank called to report the presence of a Japanese convoy in the China Sea. They haven't got any dope on where it is bound, and they con't quite explain its presence at this time.

"Do you know, Harold, we may be at War with Japan by this time next week."

(This story, old as it is, supplies more evidence in the picture of how much warning we had - or should have had - of the disastrous attack on Pearl Harbor.

Presumably FDR will put it in his memotic sometime).

Smith also reports - and he does the planning for most governmental organization changes before they occur - that there is little liklihood of any cabinet shakeup or reorganization "until the war looks a whole lot better than it does now."

There apparently will be excking Prosident Rossovelt out further on the progross of the war, or his conduct of foreign policy, beyond the point he traveled in his state of the union message.

With Congressional Leaders this week, Roosevelt exhibited a great deal of irritation over the "early and of the war" reports that Winston Churchill has periodically issued. He was likewise miffed at General Eisenhower for his predictions that the war would end in 1944.

The President tool the leaders that "I for one" hadn't been prophesying any early end of the war, and that he personally believed there was a hell of a lot of hard fighting shead, both in Europe and Asia, and was making his plans accordingly. Then he turned to the Churchill predictions, said he has given Churchill hell for making such statements, " and then he does it again right away." Theremight be some excuse in that Churchill is trying to keep the British spirit up with indications that Germany is right on the ropes, Rossevelt summised, but he doubted whether the good derived therefrom would offsel the sag in the U.S. war efforts.

Members of the Congressional group said privately that Receivedt seemed hot as a cookstove, and also reemed to believe that such predictions, and their subsequent disproval, gave the Germans a lift in morals. He said he intended to take this up with Churchill again at the Big Three meeting, and to speak his mind plainly. He indicated that Eischhover already has been told to pipe down moral predictions.

Rossvolt also told the delegation that no amount of needling would draw him out further in foreign policy statements at this time. We did state categorically that he was going to the Big Three meeting without having his hands tied by any commitments made at Teheran and Cairo, and those agreements were military and that he certainly had not bartered the U.S. position away on foreign policy

The President was told that he faced a period of uncertainty and questioning on foreign policy, and he said that he knew it, that he recognized that Burt resolver was off the reservation again, and that Wheeler's blasts would stir up other isolationists. In connection with the over-optimistic prediction of the war's end, he receiled that Joe Stalin had not been issuing any optimistic armistics doton, and believed that the Russians are set for some long hard fighting.

Congressman Mike Manafield, who went on a secret mission to China for the President, has been waiting for a week for a chance to make his report. Manafield says privately that China is in a hell of a shape, and that he is convinced parsonally Chiang has some pretty substantial reasons for refusing hitherto to do business with the Communists. The Communist elements have worked to undersine Chiang, and have shown no real tendency to compromise and havenonize the effort to throw out the Japanese, Manafield said. He believes that Chiang is the only figure around which China can maintain at least a scablance of unity, that Topo consisted to support him, and there is no way of backing out.

He found no swidence that would clinch the proposition that the Communists are working directly on orders from Moscow, and doesn't think anyone will ever dig up conclusive evidence on such a point. The Chinese armies are weary, and only the strongest support can put them back on their feet, Mansfield believes. He found Ambassador Pat Murley digging into his job, getting along well with Chiang, and inclined to be extremely frank and blunt in dealing with the Generalissime.

The next Senator who will come into the 79th by appointment is young, able Hugh B. Milichell, secretary to retiring Senator Mon Wallgren. Wallgren, now governor, was willing to appoint either Mitchell or Congressman John Coffee. The Democratic state committee picked Mitchell. He will serve until the 1946 election.

that if he were moved up to the Sem te, the Republicans would win his seat in a special election. This knocked Coffee out of the chance for the plum.

The part seat to be vacated is that of Missouri's Harry Truman, who will resign Jan. 18. It is not virtually a cinch that State Senator Frank Briggs will get Truman's seat. Briggs, according to Truman, is a highly able fellow, personable, and a loyal admirer of the President. He is expected to be straight administration.

The Justice Department's first criminal case in the Negro vote issue is about ready to file; attorneys are going over the commas and don't exactly of know when they will move. The action will be a "criminal information" in Federal court egainst a deputy sheriff in Mobile, who is charged with barring a number of Negro citizens from primary vote. We are watching and will let you know as soon as we learn when it will break.

Democratic and politically wise, Leo Crowley gets a kick cut of the current Republican struggles. He describes the G.O.P.'s organization in the Senate as "one of those White House reorganizations." He says that some of the G.O.P. Senators don't think much of Herb grounell, and when the cry arose for a full-time National Chairman the fellow who really wanted the job was Nebraska's ambitious, scrappy Senator Ker Kherry. He couldn't make it, says Crowley, and that's how they came to the compromise to put a full-time man in the headquarters in Washington.
